

QUAICH BAR

WHISKY HOUSE - SINGAPORE
EST. 2007

Collector

Quaich Bar was first established in 2007, at Grand Copthorne Waterfront. Today, with 2 other sister outlets alongside additional concepts like Signature Reserve, The Other Room and Capitol Cigar & Whisky Lounge, Quaich Bar Collector identifies itself as a whisky institute and hub with the aim of being the epicenter for all information around the remarkable ‘water of life’.

A regular pit-stop for globally acclaimed distillers in search of quality whisky tastings and masterclasses, we continue to seek new ways to share the secrets of whisky indulgence – perfect for those on the hunt for more immersive methods of savoring the golden spirit.

For fellow whisky lovers, there is an exquisite collection of more than 500 whiskies to savour by the glass, including an outstanding inventory of boutique, old and vintage bottlings in-house, so no matter how often you drop by, there’ll always be a new experience to anticipate. Our Whisky Specialists are ever ready to share an admiration and profound expertise on whisky, so you can revel in the rich history and heritage behind every whisky you taste.

Sit back and get ready to embark on an adventure deeper into the world of the very best of whisky.

Whisky Making Process

THE WHISKY MAKING PROCESS

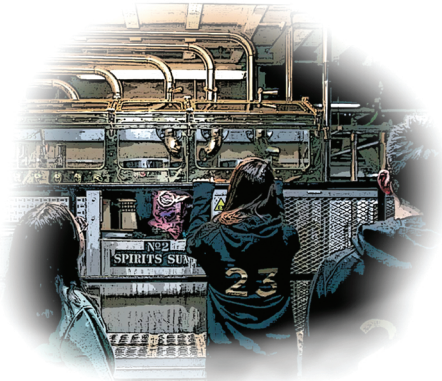

1 First, barley is steeped in water and then spread out to germinate, before being fully dried over a fire, sometimes with added peat.

2 The malted barley is mixed thoroughly in the Mash Tun with water, into a sweet liquid called 'wort'. Yeast is added next to convert the sugars to alcohol, leaving behind a liquid called 'wash'.

3 The wash will go through distillation twice, first in a wash still, then a spirit still.

4 The middle cut from the spirit still is passed through the spirit safe and into oak casks.

5 The spirit is matured for at least 3 years while being stored in a warehouse.

6 Following maturation, the whisky is either bottled as a single malt, or combined with others and sold as a blended whisky.
